IV. ENGLISH ACADEMIC WRITING

Joseph Chadwin

When writing an academic paper, the importance of language cannot be understated. Regardless of whether English is your first language or not, being able to write academic papers takes both practice and, more importantly, a set of skills. In this workshop we will discuss these skills and examine how one should go about writing an academic piece of writing (be it an essay, an article, or a book).

Joseph Chadwin is an FWF Fellow (2022-2025) in Religious Studies. Previously, he was a Doctoral Assistant at the Department (2020-2022). He holds an M.A. (Hons) in History and Religious Studies (2015) from the University of Aberdeen, an M.St. in the Study of Religion (2016) from the University of Oxford, and a PGCE (Post Graduate Certificate in Education) in Religious Studies (2018) from the University of Cambridge (funded by the British government). After undertaking a year of research in Beijing, he is undertaking a Ph.D. at the University of Vienna. Particularly favouring ethnographic methodologies, his research interests include Chinese religion, childhood and adolescent religion, Buddhism, religious identity, and religion and education.
